

Editors

Majid KhosraviNik is a Research Associate and Teaching Assistant at the Department of Linguistics and English Language, Lancaster University. He has been working on the ESRC project: RASIM in the department as well as teaching on a number of modules including; 'Understanding Media', 'Discourse Analysis: analysing language in use' and 'Sociolinguistics'. Majid is also working towards a PhD on Critical Discourse Analysis and the discursive strategies of 'self' and 'other' representation in news discourses. His research interests include: Critical Discourse Analysis; theory and application, discourse and racism/discrimination, discourse and politics, language and identity, language and gender, and language policy. www.ling.lancs.ac.uk/profiles/856.m.khosravinik@lancaster.ac.uk.

Alexandra Polyzou is a research student at the Department of Linguistics and English Language, Lancaster University. For the past 3 years she has been teaching seminars on the module 'Understanding Media' at the same Department. She has written and held conference presentations on language, gender and sexuality in Greek lifestyle magazines, genre analysis and presupposition. Her research interests include Cognitive Linguistics, especially Frame Semantics and Cognitive Metaphor Theory, issues of language, gender and sexuality, and Critical Discourse Analysis. The focus of her PhD Thesis is on the manifestation of gender ideologies in Greek lifestyle magazines. a.polyzou@lancaster.ac.uk.

Contributors

Dawn Atkinson is a Ph.D. student within the Department of Linguistics and English Language at Lancaster University. Her interest is in the study of expertise, as well as the writing of teaching materials – textbooks in particular. In her post-graduate research she is examining the way expert, or experienced, ESL/EFL textbook writers engage in the textbook-design process. Prior to studying in the U.K., Dawn completed B.A. degrees in history and English, as well an M.A. degree in journalism, at the University of Montana, U.S.A. d.perkins@lancaster.ac.uk.

Justin Charlebois is an assistant professor at Aichi Shukutoku University, Japan. He teaches a variety of courses such as gender and discourse, discourse analysis, and sociolinguistics. He received an MA in applied linguistics from Columbia University and is currently working on his doctorate from Lancaster University. His research interests are in the areas of gender and discursive psychology. justinc@asu.aasa.ac.jp.

Michael Chiou has recently finished his PhD at the University of Reading titled 'NP-anaphora in Modern Greek: A neo-Gricean pragmatic approach'. He has also received an MA in Linguistic Science (Reading) and a BA in English Language, Linguistics and Literature (Athens). His main research interests are in pragmatics, syntax and the pragmatics-syntax interface with special reference to the phenomenon of anaphora. In his thesis, he proposes that NP-anaphora patterns in Modern Greek can be partially accounted for by the employment of a pragmatic apparatus formulated upon the neo-Gricean pragmatic principles (as in Huang 2000 and Levinson 2000).

Reyhan Funda Isbuga-Erel is a lecturer at the University of Hacettepe, Turkey. She completed her PhD in January 2008 at the University of East Anglia, England. She earned her MA in Translation Studies from Hacettepe University in Turkey where she taught translation theory and translation practice. In her PhD dissertation she explored the possibility of juxtaposing Translation Studies with Critical Discourse Analysis with an emphasis on translation of taboos in literary texts within the framework of ideology. Her research interests include ideology and translation, translational norms, and translation of political, religious and sexual taboos. ferel@hacettepe.edu.tr; fundaerel@yahoo.co.uk.

Rachele Lawton is a PhD student in the Department of Linguistics and English Language at Lancaster University. She is researching language policy, language ideology and attitudes towards English and Spanish in the United States of America, with a specific focus on the English Only movement. She holds an MA in TESOL and Applied Linguistics from The University of Leicester (UK) and an MA in Liberal Studies/English from The College of Notre Dame of Maryland (USA). She is the Department Chair for English for Speakers of Other Languages (ESOL), Foreign Languages and Reading at The Community College of Baltimore County in Baltimore, Maryland (USA). She also teaches advanced academic reading and writing courses to ESOL students. r.lawton@lancaster.ac.uk.