Hull Children's Flood Project

Learning from young people about flooding and flood recovery

Following on from the floods in Hull in June 2007 this project worked with a group of flood-affected children and young people to find out about their experiences of flooding and the flood recovery process. We asked the participants to draw pictures and write about their experiences to illustrate their flood journey in the form of a 'storyboard'. We then conducted interviews with each participant to learn more about their individual stories. The research identifies key issues in young people's experiences, the roles they played in the recovery process and the implications for the future. It will contribute to an archive being generated about the floods in Hull so that the voices of young people will become part of the flooding debate and the assessment of future research and policy.

In June 2007 the floods came into Hull. I was effected by the floods. I thought it would be fun when the floods happened in 2007. But it was very Stressing for all my family.

Living in the caravan was fun we had a new little home. But after a couple of Months it wasn't that fun any more it was small. and it felt like living in a tin can. I got a rash around my nose.

It was nearly Christmas and the builders had'nt even started on the house yet, but we still made the best of our Christmas and looked forward to the new year.

My house was in a mess the builders were doing it out

April 2008
we finally got to go home.
