

Authors

Paul Flanagan's work as presented here is based on a field trip to South Africa in summer 2013 as part of his doctoral research; he completed his PhD at Edge Hill University, Lancashire in May 2014. His research interests include syntax, language typology, corpus linguistics and lexical categories.

Bimali Indrarathne is a PhD student at the Department of Linguistics and English Language at Lancaster University. Her research interests are Second Language Acquisition, Task Based Language Teaching and English for Academic Purposes.

Anchana Rukthong is currently a full-time PhD student in Linguistics at Lancaster University. Her PhD research investigates cognitive processes and strategies used to understand listening input materials in listening-to-summarize tasks. For the past years, she worked as a lecturer at the Department of Languages and Linguistics, Prince of Songkla University, Thailand.

Attila M. Wind is a PhD student at Lancaster University. His research interests centre around second language acquisition (SLA); in particular, he focuses on second language writing development. He is interested in the role of motivational factors in writing. Attila is also an English and Italian teacher, language examiner, interpreter and translator. He has experience of teaching general English and Italian as well as EAP.

Editors

Bárbara-Pamela Olmos-López is a PhD student at Lancaster University. Her PhD research focuses on the analysis of authorial identity in academic discourse, particularly on undergraduate dissertations written in English as a Foreign Language. Her research interests are also on supervision, thesis writing, academic discourse, L2 writing and bilingualism.

Jing Huang is a PhD student in Linguistics at Lancaster University. Her research interests are Multilingualism, Critical Discourse Analysis, Language ideologies, Migration and Identity, Language policies, and Chinese Dialectology.

João Almeida is a PhD student at Lancaster University. His research project focuses on the relations between nationalist discourses and the sovereign debt normativity in Portugal's media during the 2011 bailout. He is currently researching about the relations between the economic and juridical dimensions of the 2007 crisis, drawing on Critical Discourse Analysis, Critical Theory, Political Economy of Communication, Constitutional Law and Political Philosophy.