Welcome

Studying in our Department can be challenging, fulfilling and life changing. Our degrees offer you the opportunity to enhance your understanding of our complex media cultures, now and in the future; to gain experience of multiple media practices; and to develop your employability and life skills.

You will be taught by talented and passionate scholars in Media and Cultural Studies. If you wish, you can elect to combine your degree with Film Studies or take modules in Gender Studies; both of these subjects are highly complementary to Media and Cultural Studies. Disciplines we teach and study will open up your curiosity about the world we live in. You will grow into an independent learner as you progress and find your own scholarly interests, in the same way that we have found ours.

Student experience is at the heart of what we do. During the pandemic we fostered even closer ties with our students in order to be able to respond to their feedback and concerns, and to maintain the supportive, caring culture of our Department. As things started to open up again, we are encouraging participation in the many opportunities Lancaster University life has to offer; from field trips, work placements and studying abroad, to the film screenings, departmental seminars, public events and major international conferences we hold here. Our staff and students engage with important local, national and international debates around social and cultural issues, via the news and social media, campaigns and activism, and public talks. Our student ambassadors and representatives ensure that your experience and voice is at the centre of departmental life.

We look forward to welcoming you and offering you the opportunity to secure a first-class university education in a supportive, intellectually vibrant and friendly environment.

Dr Laura Clancy
Director of Media and Cultural Studies
Media and Cultural Studies at Lancaster

Media continuously influence the way we live our lives, communicate with others, and are informed about the world. Understanding and innovating in media is crucial within the creative industries - and beyond.

Our Media and Cultural Studies programme provides you with the opportunity to gain theoretical insights, analytical skills, and the wide-ranging knowledge needed to explore the production, consumption, and meaning of media and culture in an ever-changing technological landscape.

You will work towards gaining the tools and knowledge to investigate the social, economic, political, and practical dimensions of media in a global cultural setting, and to recognise the key roles of media in shaping who we are, what we think, and what we value.

Media practice

Whether it is looking at the production and reception of visual images or at the relationship between social media and activist campaigns, optional modules on your degree will help you to experiment with media practice while also studying its social and cultural role. You will normally have access to cameras and filming equipment for videography, photography, and audio recording. We also have editing facilities and relevant computer programming software.

Teaching

You will normally be taught through lectures and with small groups of students in seminars. Seminars are an opportunity for you to discuss readings, try out new ideas, and take part in practical activities, and also to get to know your fellow students and staff. Some modules in our department also have hands-on workshops, film screenings, or field trips.

Student support

You will normally be assigned an academic tutor in the Department to act as your first point of contact and to provide support. Students are also actively involved in departmental committees, giving you the chance to express your views and inform what we do.

Assessment

As well as writing essays and exam papers, we use innovative assessment methods, such as presentations, posters, scenarios and assessments where you make blogs, vlogs, or conduct your own interviews.

Dr Eva Cheuk-Yin Li

Lecturer in Media and Cultural Studies

As a Lecturer on the Media and Cultural Studies programme, I am proud of the wide range of expertise we have in our teaching and research team. This includes my expertise in global fandom and audience participation, as well as colleagues with expertise in (digital) technologies and platforms, television, the media industry, audio and music cultures, visual culture, and social media.

You’ll study a variety of media-related topics, thinking critically about what it means to produce and consume media in an ever-changing technological and cultural landscape. You’ll also get to be creative with images, audio, video, and text.

  - MINOR SUBJECT MODULE

Transformations: From Mass Media to Social Media

Our core first year module runs across all three teaching terms and is made up of short ‘blocks’ that each focus on a key concept related to staff members’ expertise and recent research. The blocks below have run in previous years, and highlight some examples of the topics addressed in the first year.

From Mass Media to Social Media (and back)

All media, from all generations, depend on each other for their meaning. Computer games are often understood in relation to the medium of film, while film is often understood in relation to books and literature. Netflix, as a platform, is inherently interlinked with television, but also with the networked computer and the smartphone. Smartphones seem to have incorporated a whole set of different media: from the telephone, the newspaper, to the typewriter and personal computer. How then can we think critically about how media connect with, and depend on, each other for their meaning?

Media and Representation

Culture is a key site where meaning is produced, and cultural representations give us the framework through which we understand the world. Why does it matter if some people are represented, and others not? What kind of understandings are being produced, and which are not? How might media and culture produce ‘consent’ for how society is organised? And how might media and culture produce ‘consent’ for particular systems of inequality?

Media and Technology

Today’s culture is often called a ‘participatory culture’. Social media platforms such as Facebook, Twitter, Weibo, and YouTube make it possible for everyday users and fans to participate with the media technologies, franchises, and texts that they know and love. How can we critically examine media participation, whether in fan communities or manifest as media detoxes and non-participation?

Media and Participation

Media and technology can be considered from optimistic and pessimistic viewpoints. At times, media technologies are linked with assumptions of progress and even a “technological determinism” that presumes the power of technologies to shape cultures. But at other times, media technologies are tied to moral panics and blamed for the ills of society. To what extent can media technologies help us to build utopias in the future?

Year 2

BA (Hons) Media and Cultural Studies

CORE
- Key Perspectives on Media and Culture

CORE
- Media Research Lab

OPTIONAL MODULE
- See page 12 for a list of optional modules.

Focuses on critical approaches to media and culture and engages with key texts and debates which we will use to inform our analysis of contemporary media practices.

Year 2

BA (Hons) Film, Media and Cultural Studies

CORE
- Key Perspectives on Media and Culture

CORE
- Media Research Lab

OPTIONAL MODULE
- Hollywood and Beyond: Global Cinema

You can discover more about your Film Studies core and optional modules on our website. Your degree is typically weighted 50/50 between Media and Cultural Studies and Film.

Year 3

BA (Hons) Media and Cultural Studies

CORE
- Independent Dissertation Project

CORE
- Debates in Global Media

OPTIONAL MODULE
- Placement Year or Study Abroad degrees

- If you are on a placement year or study abroad degree, you will spend your third year on work placement, or studying abroad. In Year 4, you will return to Lancaster to complete the final year curriculum.

You choose either a research dissertation or a media project dissertation on a topic of your choice, supported by a supervisor and applying the skills you have learnt. In the media project variant of the dissertation, you produce a practical piece (e.g. music/audio, video, ‘zine, etc.), alongside a critical reflection on the project.

Modules

The wide choice of optional modules reflects areas of topical interest and our research expertise. The Department aims for every student to be able to take a module with some assignments involving media practice components in both Year 2 and the final year of their degree.

Optional modules are subject to change; please keep an eye on our website for updates to the list below.

Year 1
- Contemporary Social Problems
- Gender Studies: Identities, Inequalities and Politics
- The Sociological Imagination

Year 2
- Climate Change and Society
- Consumer Culture and Advertising
- Digital Cultures
- Documentary Film Practice
- Film and Comic Books
- Hollywood and Beyond: Global Cinema
- Media and Visual Culture
- Racisms and Racial Formation
- Short Film Production
- Television, Culture and Society

Year 3
- African American Cinema
- Cities, Cultures, Creativities - Urban Development in the Age of Global Media
- Fans and Audiences in a Global Context
- Feminism and Social Change
- Journalism and Multimedia Production
- Silent Cinema
- Social Media and Activism
- Sociology goes to Hollywood

Media project dissertation

As a student representative, I helped to develop the media project option for our final year dissertation. I was passionate about implementing this option because it would allow people to express themselves in creative ways. When I took the module I made a lookbook about cultural appropriation in fashion. It allowed me to explore aspects of the topic that couldn’t be easily expressed in words alone.

Sruthi Chilukoti, Alumna
BA (Hons) Media and Cultural Studies

Digital Cultures

This module was very enjoyable as I had the chance to explore highly engaging topics that are relevant to post-modern reality - from digital surveillance and self-tracking to the domain of hacking and E-Waste. I recommend it to all those interested, especially for its controversy analysis assignment.

Marie-Louise Siakki, Alumna
BA (Hons) Media and Cultural Studies

Television, Culture and Society

This is an incredibly thought-provoking module. As such a mundane aspect of our lives, we often overlook the significance of television as a social medium. This module unpicks the significance of television, positioning it within the current era of ever-expanding content-streaming platforms such as Netflix or Amazon Prime. It offers a valuable perspective on television, one that explores its history, but also evaluates its future.

Neve Rawlinson, Alumna
BA (Hons) Sociology
In the first year here, you can choose the following module:

Gender Studies: Identities, Inequalities and Politics

This module considers gender relations, the different social conditions in which people live, especially in relation to gendered differences amongst people, and how this leads to a diversity of feminist politics. You will explore a range of topics such as:

- feminist histories
- intersectionality
- race and racialisation
- bodies and biology
- sexualities
- gender and class
- women and religion
- gender and language
- popular culture
- crime and law

Take the opportunity to explore or specialise in Gender Studies as part of your Media and Cultural Studies degree. The flexibility of our undergraduate programmes allows you to take one or more modules in Gender Studies while working towards a related degree.

If you wish to pursue your interest further, from your second year onwards you can take further optional modules such as Gender and Intersecting Inequalities and Feminism and Social Change.

In your final year, you can also complete your Independent Dissertation Project in a topic focused on gender issues. Previous students have researched topics ranging from women YouTubers and celebrity feminists to intimate partner violence. You can also choose to study gender-related modules taught by other departments, such as English; History; Linguistics; Law; and Politics, Philosophy and Religion.

Teaching inspired by world-class research

Here in the Sociology Department, we have always been at the forefront of exciting and innovative research, which has been recognised globally. Sociology at Lancaster is ranked 83rd in the world, and we are amongst the top 150 globally for Communication and Media Studies (QS World Subject Rankings 2023). We are home to several different research centres and are a hub for interdisciplinary research at the University. Our centres bring together diverse staff and students from across the world through their research and events. Our main areas of research include:

Gender and Inequalities

We are an internationally-recognised leader in this area of research, covering issues such as race and ethnicity, sexuality and reproduction, media representations of gender, feminist online activism, gender-based violence, women’s human rights, and gender equality policies. You can meet many people from this research centre on our interdiscipliary Year One module, and in optional modules available through the degree. We organise public events such as Feminist Movie Mondays.

Mobilities

Lancaster University is where the new ‘mobilities paradigm’ in the social sciences, humanities and sciences started. Put simply, this research centre studies how technological, social and cultural developments in public and private transportation, communications, data storage and retrieval, and surveillance systems are rapidly changing the nature of travel and of communications at a distance. In particular we are now linking this work to the pressing climate emergency that we face. You can learn with our specialist researchers on an optional module, Climate Change and Society.

Social and Political Theory

We have a strong commitment to social critique, applying this to transdisciplinary investigations into the personal, cultural, economic and political foundations of society. Our strengths are in the philosophy of social science, critique of neoliberalism and coloniality, and urban theory and forms of resistance.

Social Futures

Several members of the Department are involved in the Centre for Social Futures which aims to improve thinking, visioning, and analysis of the future by combining high-quality social science and humanities research with computing, engineering and medical science. Our research in this area includes the future of AI and human intelligence, the North post-Brexit, and planetary futures and the Anthropocene. We work closely with industries, institutions and people who are part of the future to explore routes to the futures we want and need.

Science, Technology and the Environment

Lancaster University is renowned for its research in the social studies of science, technology and the environment, which involves staff and students from a range of different disciplines. We aim to further critical understanding of the social, political, and cultural dimensions of innovative technologies, and of their implications for public policy and society. Our research addresses the uptake of healthcare technologies, caring practices, climate change, disaster resilience, robotics and automation, energy use, and big data.
Eleanor spent a year of her Media and Cultural Studies degree at Monash University in Melbourne, Australia.

I decided to do a year abroad because I had always wanted to live abroad and the opportunity to do it while studying seemed perfect. I went to Monash University in Melbourne, Australia, which was amazing because I had never lived in a massive city before. It was great in terms of meeting new people – Australians, people from other universities in the UK and even people from Lancaster who were also visiting.

The first thing someone said to me when I arrived in Melbourne was “Pick your football team – people will want to know which team you support!” Even though I’m not a big football fan, I became really interested in Australian Football League. I also had a great time travelling around Australia in school breaks and learned that 1) it can be freezing in July and 2) they do not put shrimp on the BBQ!

I learned a lot as a person during my visit - about being independent, about Australian history and culture, and about how celebrity adverts in Australian media are completely different from what we see in the UK. When I came back, these different cultural experiences were really helpful in my seminars and coursework.

The study abroad teams I worked with were just the best people to contact and were really helpful if there was any confusion with modules. When it came to considering postgrad and careers, Australia was on the list of possibilities – and it definitely wouldn’t have been if I hadn’t been there before.

Eleanor Clist, Alumna
BA (Hons) Media and Cultural Studies
My experience at Lancaster gave me a theoretical and practical knowledge of the industry I wanted to enter and, most importantly, the confidence and the courage to ‘dream big’ and pursue a career in film and media.

As a result of three years of incredibly interesting and yet very intense and challenging studies, as well as multiple internships, I managed to secure a full-time job as a Studio Coordinator at Studio of Art and Commerce (London), a progressive advertising and communications agency, primarily working with disruptive brands and spaces across multiple disciplines.

Diana Judelson
BA (Hons) Film, Media and Cultural Studies

I was incredibly lucky to be taught by some amazing professors and tutors, whose engaging lectures and seminars took a very personal approach.
