Reading List for Masters Modules

This reading list provides some suggestions of books and articles/blogs which you may find useful as background reading before you join us in October. We have dividing the reading list by module so you can see exactly what may be useful for you. Each module convenor has provided the title of a key textbook which will be used in the module as well as some other resources which may give you an idea of the interesting and topical issues we will be covering in the modules.

Please note that although the textbooks mentioned are a good basis for your preparations for the start of your course, you do not have to rush out and buy them all straight away as there are copies available in the library.

Listed below are the Law Programmes that we offer with their compulsory modules. I would recommend starting your reading with these modules and then moving onto any optional modules which you’d like to look at.

For Joint Courses between either the PPR department or LEC we have only listed the Law Modules that are compulsory so ensure you contact the other departments directly for information on their modules requirements (If you click on the link for the Programme it will take you to the programme webpage).

For Criminology Students, especially those studying the MSc programmes, please check what modules you have with FASS (Research Skills Modules).
